Crypto Academy Sessions, Ep. 3 — How to Trade Large Caps

So far in the Crypto Academy, we've taken a 30,000-foot look at crypto markets. OSF, Mando, and Raoul have shared their respective journeys and approach to digital assets and OSF has shown us why understanding macro markets are so pivotal to the crypto voyage.

In Episode 3, it's time to get a bit more granular.

An expert crypto trader and Web3 entrepreneur, Mando is here to school us on how he approaches crypto portfolio construction. Specifically, Mando looks at why most crypto investors should anchor their portfolios with large-cap coins (BTC, ETH, SOL, etc.), how to trade bitcoin and ether, risk management tips, and key factors that affect price action in these major markets.

"The major coins will outperform almost everything else over the medium- to long-term," says Mando. "For most investors, focusing on this market cap will allow you to look for those asymmetric opportunities elsewhere."

Institutional Adoption is Here to Stay

There is no denying that the world of macro and crypto have collided and are beginning to merge into one single global financial system. But to take the next step toward broad financial market acceptance and another sustained bull market run, crypto will need widespread institutional adoption.

In this fascinating conversation, Jack Neureuter, research analyst at Fidelity Digital Assets, joins Raoul to give us an insider's perspective on when that wall of money will come flooding in. The way Jack sees it, institutional adoption is only a matter of time, but there are still hurdles to climb.

This episode is an important one for crypto investors who want to better understand how the market whales are starting to position themselves, what that means for the construction of your portfolio, and how it could change market behavior moving forward.
